

Please, please allow the provisions of Wisconsin's no-call law to stand as they are now in effect. I am a 73-year old senior with some difficulty getting around and it is very difficult to be beset with unwanted phone calls for items and services that are not needed or wanted. Companies with whom I have a relationship are able to send me notice of new products in the mailings that I regularly receive. I am not interested in companies, organizations, products or services that are offered over the phone. I am not even interested in hearing any of the "pitch" and hang up immediately; I believe most of the people called have the same response. So telemarketing time, effort and money (not to mention good will) are lost for any company or association that uses this sales method. It is wonderful that Wisconsin has consideration for its citizens and is not overwhelmed by the powerful business lobbies.
